

helping people • changing lives

a single mother, working part time, and struggling to pay rent and feed her children...

an injured construction worker needs new job skills to support his family...

a veteran, living on the streets and fighting with addiction...

a woman fearing for her safety each time her husband comes home...

The faces of poverty, homelessness, addiction and abuse each have a story. The causes are complex and the solutions must be multi-faceted.

The Human Services Commission and its nonprofit partners lead the way in developing innovative programs to meet the needs of Lane County's communities. We work collaboratively across the county from the Oregon Coast to the Cascades, in rural towns and on city streets to help individuals help themselves.

During fiscal year 2009-2010, our nonprofit partners assisted 82,077 individuals in 52,524 households to achieve stability, improve their health, gain greater independence, and establish a higher quality of life.

We are accountable, resourceful and diligent stewards of all resources entrusted to us.

When you're vulnerable, in need or overwhelmed, every door seems impossible to open. The nonprofit partners of the Human Services Commission open new doors to a whole network of services, creating opportunities for individuals and families to get help. Regardless of the entryway, every nonprofit in our network is connected, ensuring that each need is met in the best possible way.

We are accountable, resourceful and diligent stewards of all resources entrusted to us.

We are responsive and flexible. Through our nonprofit network, we can adapt quickly to meet the community's needs.

Whether it's an individual in crisis or a family whose needs require collaboration from multiple organizations, the Human Services Fund allows our nonprofit partners to respond when and where they are needed.

Each year, the Human Services Commission joins local government together with local nonprofits serving thousands of people across our community.

This partnership effort results in nearly $13 for every dollar in funds, cash, donated goods and volunteer hours that comes from local general funds.

We treat everyone with respect. We support each individual's and family's independence and encourage full participation in the community.

Asking for help can be an intimidating and uncomfortable process. The nonprofit partners of the Human Services Commission all believe in the strength and resilience of those they serve. Every collaborative effort is designed with a focus on moving people toward independence.
